Ecology

The need for peace on earth

The Network team writes: In this issue of WN Mark Wahlqvist states that we humans need to see our species as just one within nature, in order to survive and to live well. Achievement of harmonious co-existence between species is shown in a series of photographs taken over a ten-year period by Canadian film-maker and photographer Gregory Colbert, in India, Burma, Sri Lanka, Kenya, Egypt, and Antarctica, who prefers to see himself as a story-teller. His deeply moving project Ashes and Snow states: 'No longer shown as merely a member of the family of man, humans are seen as a member of the family of animals'. There is no competition or hostility between the species presented, some of which like big cats are commonly assumed to be hostile and dangerous to humans by nature and not only when attacked.

Editor's note

The purpose of Network is to remind us of the contribution of the arts, including photography, to our understanding of food, nutrition, health and well-being. It presents the art without any extensive comment – though we welcome follow-up letters for publication in Feedback. Please send contributions to wn.network@gmail.com
